

THIS IS NOT MY PORTFOLIO

It's a collection of stories and identities that says something — about people, brands and even about me.

I designed all this.

and much more...

But what matters is how!

Not just what it looks like.
Not even what it says.

But why it made sense —
and how it made people feel something real.

Terez café

It started with a walk. I saw them setting up and stepped in for just a coffee — but it became more.

Over time, I became part of the place, and eventually, they asked me to design their logo.

It wasn't just a project; it felt like a relationship — with the cushions, the mismatched chairs, the music.

The identity became exactly that: playful, warm, and full of texture.

- Art Direction, Visual Identity
- Inspired by: hand-stitched pillows, everyday interactions, the name “Terez”
- Outcome: logo adopted on social, brand colors integrated into café interiors

Al Rawda

I grew up hearing stories about Al Rawda, one of Damascus's oldest cafés — where poets, politicians, and actors passed through. I never imagined working with them.

Drawn to the journalist's table, where ideas flowed, I created a social media grid that felt like a newspaper — full of shisha smoke, burned-out headlines, and inside jokes only Damascus would get.

- Concept and Visual Language
- Cultural branding via storytelling
- A tribute to the café's legacy in media, poetry, and political dialogue

Abd Al Razaq Olive oil

This wasn't just an olive oil brand — it was a family's land, pressed into form.

The Abd Al Razaq grove sits quietly in a small corner of Latakia.

I wanted the design to hold that stillness. That pride.

The bottle carries the skyline of the city, a few ancient ruins, and one drop of oil — suspended between black and white. A quiet contrast and visual pause.

Fardoss Hotel

As a young Syrian artist, finding a place to work and connect was a challenge. So when I had the chance to create one, it meant everything.

Fardoss, one of Syria's oldest hotels, held a forgotten restaurant. They didn't need a rebrand — they needed a heartbeat.

I envisioned Fardoss Community — a space for creatives to connect, share ideas, and pay by simply using the table.

I led the full transformation — branding, redecoration, and programming — until the space started speaking again.

Logo concept

This logo features a rotated version of the distinctive silhouette of the Fardoss Hotel tower, symbolizing a new perspective and evolution from its original form. The logo's dynamic and contemporary shape captures the essence of growth, progress, and transformation within the Fardoss Community. The rotation of the tower reflects a sense of movement, change, and adaptation, symbolizing the community's ability to evolve and embrace new opportunities.

In this version of the logo, 3 forms were made with different spacing. Each logo Represents an individual identity and each form shows the transformation of the community inside & outside the hotel. Overall, the Fardoss Community logo with its rotated shape inspired by the Fardoss Hotel tower embodies a spirit of progress, innovation, and unity, symbolizing a community that honors its past while looking towards a bright future.

ZOOM events

From dots to orbits — I led the rebranding of ZOOM, an events company with roots across Qatar, Syria, and the region.

Starting with the "O" — a dot, a circle, a node — we zoomed out: dots became paths, paths became networks, networks became orbits.

The new identity captured their spirit: connecting people, moving ideas, shifting energy.

SD Media

I joined SD Media as a senior designer, and on day one, was asked to rebrand the entire company.

With a sharp art director, we created a playful idea: a star inside a Rubik's Cube — a tool to highlight and make things shine.

The identity grew beyond visuals into voice and content, with four rooted social series: Trivia Tidbits, What The Fast (WTF), Hiccups, and more — quick, local, and scroll-proof.

On top of that, I created a stream of short-form reels: tips & tricks in design tools like Illustrator, After Effects, Photoshop — mixed with quirky, fast, and fun edits built for attention.

This wasn't just design. It was early proof I could shape a system from scratch.

Kizmet Media

Moving to Dubai, I joined Kizmet Media as an Art Director — a step that shaped my career and deepened my connection to the city's culture.

Through GMLOx, our client I saw how stories, visuals, and community come together. One major project was rebranding Emirates Villages, celebrating the identities of places like Umm Al Quwain, Qidfaa, and Al Rams.

I built a flexible visual grid to showcase each village's unique vibe — from photography to color palettes — while keeping the system cohesive and event-ready.

On a parallel track, I developed the full branding for Kan Ya Ramadan, an upcoming event rooted in Levantine nostalgia.

The identity leaned into bold retro styling — saturated pinks, deep blues, and a playful contrast that honored the past while grabbing attention in the now.

Not every story ends.
Some just change form.

Maybe this is not a portfolio maybe it is a story or a conversation. Either way — if it sparked something, let's keep it going.
